SPECIAL NOTICES.

support of the proposal are well worth attention. We have said that the appeals to public sympathy on such grounds as the present have in the past been generally responded to. But the Mayor last night only reminded us of what we already know when he said that some of these past funds have resulted in an unusable surplus. The Bulli appeal realised £45,000, of which £15,000 are still in hand. In his place in Parliament last night the Premier stated that it was his intention, in compliance with the request of the secretary of the Bulli Fund, to bring in a bill to take over this amount and apply it to the relief of the widows and orphans at Mount Kembla. The South African war fund was not raised on the same lines, but thought for the widows and relatives of those who might have fallen was not absent from the minds of those whose contributions amounted to upwards of £50,000. Of this the Mayor reports £17,000 as remaining unexpended. Then he spoke of some thousands remaining over from the Leikow disaster fund, and of other thousands from the Hawkesbury flood relief movement. All this certainly looks like waste of system, such as the generous subscribers to these funds have a right to see corrected. The Mayor's idea apparently is that if all these subscriptions had been pooled in a common National Fund for the relief of sufferers from mining, railway, or other accidents of this public character, a workable body of capital might by this time have been established. His new pro-passed in this way, and that at the forthcoming public meeting the whole matter should be taken into fair consideration. The proposition is by no means an unreasonable one, but it is for the public meeting to give it shape. The scheme seems to us to imply economy in administration, a solid financial basis on which to found future efforts of public sympathy, and at least the outline of a national scheme of relief in cases of accident or calamity, to be constructed on broad and generous lines. But of course the Mount Kembla claims must come first.

THE ARBITRATION COURT.

The decision of the Arbitration Court which was delivered yesterday in the matter of an application for a summons against a party to an industrial dispute for an alleged infraction of the Act is of great public importance, and of great public utility. The point of the application was that it sought to bring a party to an industrial suit before the Court to be there tried for a misdemeanour, which having been proved the guilty person would become liable to a fine or imprisonment, or both. The question, therefore, was whether the Court was a court as well for the trial of offences under the Act as for the decision of industrial disputes purely or whether it had a mixed jurisdiction. It is a new tribunal, of exemplary powers, and this is a new question. When it was raised some weeks ago the Court fully recognised the importance of the point, and it was rather fully argued, after which judgment was reserved. This judgment the Court apparently unanimously delivered yesterday, and its decision was that while the Court had purview and power in the case of industrial offences it would not constitute itself a tribunal for dealing with anything in the nature of a misdemeanour, but would refer such matters to the competence of the ordinary courts. This is a finding entirely in accord with public feeling and the spirit of our heart assistance.

The lay mind and the legal mind equally would have regarded with misgiving the setting up of an all-embracing civil and criminal jurisdiction (as to offences created by the Criminal Justice Act, 1925) in the proposed situation, is sufficiently indicated in the President's finding. Who could regard with concern a state of things by which a person charged with a misdemeanour punishable with a fine of £100 or three months' imprisonment, or both fine and imprisonment, would be dealt with by a court in its essential jurisdiction a civil tribunal, and yet where the defendant or prisoner would have no jury and would have no appeal from his sentence. That consideration alone is usually the paramount factor. But beyond this, the learned President of the Criminal Justice Court was unable to show the practical inconveniences that would follow from attempting to turn the Court into both a civil and a criminal court. There would be such delay, such expense, and so many difficulties in administering the dual jurisdiction that apart from the more serious question of principle involved these themselves in a striking form. But the Court does not direct itself of authority in exercising its special functions. The case may be said to be analogous to the ordinary powers of a high court to maintain its entire freedom of decision and to enforce its judgments. This latest decision of the Court, exceptional in importance, will add to public confidence in the new tribunal.

THE VICTORIAN PUBLIC SERVICE.

The serious defect which has to be dealt with by the Victorian Government has led already to some general measures of reformation, and amongst others to the suspension of the system of increments of salary which in the discretion of the Ministers may be given to the public servants. In addition measures of a more severe nature may be required. Against these steps the Public Service of that State has protested by a deputation to the Premier, and asked that the system of reformation should be more uniformly spread over the community. Mr. Hargreaves's answer did not give the deputation much comfort, for, while he agreed that so much comfort should be called on for bear undue taxation, he declared that the tenure of office and the salaries allotted were entirely dependent upon the exigencies of the State. He would not have returned any other answer excepting a great change in the status of the Public Service. At the same time it is easy to perceive that the Civil servant, whether "convenanted" or "unconvenanted," has just fuel and an insecurity and a sense of temporary when he sees that in any period of temporary financial stress the Ministry which is by its own or its predecessor's extravagance is forced to economize seeks first on salaries, or both, of the "Public Service." Hence the appeal of the Victorian Civil servants for some aid of economy that will not fall first and chiefly upon their own devoted heads. The case

...and children had crowded amidst a bustle of making excitement. Where else of finest hours were dimmed by disaster, and the recent anguish, all was now order and quiet. At the moment when the body was being lowered into the ground, a number of people from a heap of material curled in the doorway. The littered clothes and boots of the dead were lying round.

As the crowd turned away, some struck by the shock of the disaster, some by the sight of the through there were many who were deeply affected by the sight of the disaster. Bands of mourning were noticeable on old and young. The men waited about in groups, but freedom of conversation and discussion was not yet restored to the residents of Kibbly, and the crowd was silent. The first money paid to Adam Ford, the contractor for road building, and he in turn paid the contractor for his help. Up at his house a group of young workers, varying in age from about 14 to 20, were lying about on the ground, waiting for the money which was to be paid to them for the work they had done. They were all very pale and looked as if they had been through a great deal. They were all very pale and looked as if they had been through a great deal. ### ANOTHER VICTIM.

SUFFERERS FROM AFTERDAMP.

The list of victims increased by one to-night, when Richard Lane, junior, aged 19, died in his hospital from the effects of afterdamp. With his father, Richard Lane, senior, he was admitted to the hospital last evening. Both were in the mine at the time of the explosion, and suffered severely from the afterdamp. After remaining in the hospital for some days, they were removed to the hospital for the recovery of the older man.

Another sufferer from afterdamp is Frederick Dunning, who is also an inmate of the hospital. He was in the mine at the time of the explosion, and suffered severely from the afterdamp. After remaining in the hospital for some days, they were removed to the hospital for the recovery of the older man.

Isaac Peters, who has been in the hospital for some days, was taken to the hospital for the recovery of the older man. He was in the mine at the time of the explosion, and suffered severely from the afterdamp. After remaining in the hospital for some days, they were removed to the hospital for the recovery of the older man.

A little man named John Smith, who was a member of the rescue parties, is in the hospital suffering from afterdamp. He was in the mine at the time of the explosion, and suffered severely from the afterdamp. After remaining in the hospital for some days, they were removed to the hospital for the recovery of the older man.

Among the volunteers at Mount Kibbly was Miss Woodward, the daughter of Mr. Woodward. She was in the mine at the time of the explosion, and suffered severely from the afterdamp. After remaining in the hospital for some days, they were removed to the hospital for the recovery of the older man.

The fatalities among those who reached the surface have caused some surprise. Although the men have been in the hospital for some days, they have not yet recovered from the effects of the explosion. The men have been in the hospital for some days, and they have not yet recovered from the effects of the explosion.

Depressed confidence in their recovery. Much seems to depend on the constitution of those affected, for some of the miners carried out unconscious improved rapidly, and are now in fair health.

THREE MEN STILL MISSING.

WOLLONGONG, Tuesday.

The three men Brennan, Price, and young Walker are still missing. They were in the mine at the time of the explosion, and suffered severely from the afterdamp. After remaining in the hospital for some days, they were removed to the hospital for the recovery of the older man. The men have been in the hospital for some days, and they have not yet recovered from the effects of the explosion.

Mr. Atkinson, chief inspector of coal mines, and Mr. Robertson, managing director, made another survey of the mine to-day, and are satisfied as to the state of the mine. They have been in the mine at the time of the explosion, and suffered severely from the afterdamp. After remaining in the hospital for some days, they were removed to the hospital for the recovery of the older man.

The matter will be brought into a tribunal. The work of removing the broken machinery is proceeding, but it will be at least a fortnight before the winding engine will be got to work again.

PUBLIC MEETING OF SYMPATHY.

An important public meeting of the residents of Wollongong will be held to-morrow evening for the purpose of expressing sympathy with the unfortunate people who have been in the mine at the time of the explosion, and suffered severely from the afterdamp. After remaining in the hospital for some days, they were removed to the hospital for the recovery of the older man.

The meeting will be held at the Wollongong Town Hall, and will be presided over by Mr. J. C. Williamson. The meeting will be held at the Wollongong Town Hall, and will be presided over by Mr. J. C. Williamson.

COMINGS AND GOINGS.

The acquaintance in this instance was Captain Tyrrel, who greeted the ladies as they were sitting there after dinner coffee. "This is an unexpected pleasure," he exclaimed, as they shook hands. "I did not know you were on your travels."

"Only about five weeks," replied Alicia, speaking for herself and Alice. "We are going to introduce my friend and travelling companion, Mr. Meyer, to you."

"I had also the honour of being presented to your late father, Miss Tyrrel," said Meyer, as he bowed to her. "He was a very old soldier, and though I spent only one evening in his company, I am sure I never forgot him."

"I am sure we should not," interrupted Alicia, who had a holy horror of gambling. "I should not advise you to try. You might find the game amusing, but I am sure you would not like the result."

"I forgot to ask after your brother, Mr. Tyrrel," he added, by way of changing the subject. "He was when I last heard of him, but the branch house there was taken suddenly ill, and my brother had to go out of the country."

"Mr. Tyrrel came to Bombay," said Meyer. "How long is he there?" "He is there," replied Tyrrel, "but I am not sure he will stay long."
